A constitutional amendment changing the term of office of a judge becomes effective on the date the votes for the amendment are canvassed, whereas a statutory provision changing the term of a judicial office will not be effective until the expiration of the term in which the statute is enacted.

A constitutional amendment changing the term of office of a judge becomes effective on the date the votes for the amendment are canvassed.<sup>1</sup> Generally, such amendment has only a prospective application without effect on the term of incumbent judges.<sup>2</sup> Similarly, a statutory provision changing the term of a judicial office may not be effective until the expiration of the term in which the statute is enacted.<sup>3</sup>
